3. Credit spreads remain dependent on domestic policies
4. Risk appetite for EM assets could weaken further, despite ECB's open-ended QE
4.1. Net flows into EM bonds stopped since end-July
4.2. Foreign investors are avoiding exposure to EM currencies

In 2019, foreign investors bought only hard-currency EM bonds

Negative correlation between interest rates and currency performance since end-July

Conclusions

1. QE-driven flows chased liquidity over returns
   1. Eurozone investors preferred US equities, and US, UK and Japanese bonds
   2. Flows into EM bonds were very small in comparison

2. QE compressed term premia for CEE bonds
   1. EM extended the average maturity of issuance
   2. Change in investor structure to global mandates that require better liquidity

3. Credit spreads remain dependent on domestic policies
   1. Spread compression was driven by better fiscal policy leading to lower financing needs

4. Risk appetite for EM assets could weaken further, despite ECB's open-ended QE
   1. Foreign investors did not take currency exposure to EM in 2019
   2. Poor appetite for EM currencies could persist amid a strong USD and poor growth in EM
